Critical Period Hypothesis Revisited

The Impact of Age on Ultimate Attainment in the Pronunciation of a Foreign Language

Including CD
PART ONE
THEORETICAL CONSIDERATIONS

Chapter 1  Age Related Differences in Second Language Acquisition –
The Issue of Critical Period

1.1 Lateralisation and Critical Period  21
   1.1.1 Brain Anatomy  21
   1.1.2 Left Versus Right Hemisphere Specialisations  23
   1.1.3 Evidence for Lateralisation  28
   1.1.4 Hemispheric Involvement in Second Language Acquisition  33
   1.1.5 Lateralisation Completion and Second Language Acquisition  36

1.2 Neurolinguistic Arguments Concerning Critical Period  38
   1.2.1 The Brain Plasticity Hypotheses  41
   1.2.2 The Biologically Based Critical Period Hypotheses  45
      1.2.2.1 The Critical Period by Puberty Hypotheses  49
      1.2.2.2 The Critical Period by Childhood Hypotheses  54
      1.2.2.3 The Sociobiological Critical Period Hypothesis  59
      1.2.2.4 The Multiple Critical Periods Hypothesis  60

1.3 Cognitive Arguments Concerning Critical Period  64
   1.3.1 The Cognitively Based Critical Period Hypotheses  64
   1.3.2 Counter Evidence to Cognitively Based Critical Period  71
      1.3.2.1 Cognitive Maturity and L1 Experience  71
      1.3.2.2 The Same L2 Learning Process in Children and Adults  76

1.4 Psychological and Environmental Arguments Concerning
   Critical Period  77
   1.4.1 Affective-motivational and Social Factors  78
   1.4.2 Input Factors  93

1.5 Other Arguments Concerning Critical Period  99
   1.5.1 Access to Universal Grammar  99
1.5.2 The ‘de-coupling’ Hypothesis

Chapter 2 Studies of the Critical Period for Second Language Pronunciation

2.1 Studies Supporting the Critical Period Hypothesis
   2.1.1 The ‘Younger=Better’ Position
   2.1.2 Accounting for Younger Learners’ Success
2.2 Studies Challenging the Critical Period Hypothesis
   2.2.1 The ‘Older=Younger’ Position
   2.2.2 Accounting for Older Learners’ Success
2.3 Summary

PART TWO
EMPIRICAL FINDINGS

Chapter 3 Preparation of the Research

3.1 Purpose of the Research
3.2 Significance of the Research
3.3 Defining a Case-study
3.4 Subjects in the Study
3.5 Data Collection Methods
3.6 Data Analysis Procedures
3.7 Operationalizing Variables
3.8 The Research Hypotheses
3.9 Summary

Chapter 4 Presentation and Discussion of Results

4.1 Study 1 – English as a Foreign Language
   4.1.1 Comparison of the Judges
   4.1.2 Scoring the Controls
   4.1.3 Scoring the Experimentals
   4.1.4 Relationship between Variables
      4.1.4.1 Learning Setting
      4.1.4.2 Phonetic Training
      4.1.4.3 Length of Learning
   4.1.5 Success of Adult Learners in the English Pronunciation
      4.1.5.1 The Case of Bożena
4.1.5.2 The Case of Brigitte 201
4.1.5.3 The Case of Aleksandra 203
4.1.5.4 The Case of Ludmila 204
4.1.5.5 The Case of Kirsi 205
4.1.5.6 The Case of Patricia 206
4.1.5.7 The Case of Mirek 207
4.2 Study 2 – Polish as a Foreign Language 208
   4.2.1 Comparison of the Judges 209
   4.2.2 Scoring the Controls 209
   4.2.3 Scoring the Experimentals 210
   4.2.4 Relationship between Variables 210
      4.2.4.1 Learning Setting 210
      4.2.4.2 Phonetic Training 211
      4.2.4.3 Length of Learning 212
   4.2.5 Success of Adult Learners in the Polish Pronunciation 212
      4.2.5.1 The Case of Alla 212
      4.2.5.2 The Case of Jane 213
4.3 ‘How to’ Guide for Adult Learners 214
4.4 ‘How to’ Guide for Teachers 222

Chapter 5 Summary of the Research

5.1 Conclusions 226
5.2 Further Research 231
